

I have a problem with the current developings of the CBA trying to impose an exception for me living in Indiana. Certainly I agree the bank can call me if it is in direct connection with a transaction or an account, but under no circumstances should they be able to call and sell or advertise additional services not directly connected to the established in any way. If I need something I will go find out where I can get it. The banks are already sending too much unsolicited material through the mail - the last thing consumers is getting that through the phone.

Thank you for listening.
